COMPULSORY SERVICE NEAR BRITAIN, SAYS BROADBENT

Writer Declares Aristocrats, Once Ridiculed, Have Risen Nobly to the Country's Defence.

By GEORGE BROADBENT.

LONDON, Nov. 22.—London, and that means England, has found an enemy of good fortune in the war. The able division of the following words:

JOE FIRE SAID
THE MAN

That the cause of the French and English commanders should be capable of such a division, with the nation of the country which served as the cause of the war and the title given to the ruler of the German nation, should also be capable of such division, was to make the prohibition an absolute certainty.

This, of course, is for the suppression only, and the greatest men of affairs who are directing the destinies of England in this war, for all existence, have not allowed their efforts in her behalf to slacken in the slightest degree.

Kitchener's cry is "more men and more men," and the word of the moment in London is not "honey," "sugar," "candy," "candy."

It has for centuries been England's policy to maintain her standing army only by compulsory service, and the present war without having to resort to it, in spite of the fact that she had not only herself but her colonies to defend.

NOT WAR OF YEARS.
But because, however, that it is not to be a war of years, but a war of hours, and that in all probability, the victory will go to the constant, well-trained troops to the detriment of the men who have been disabled.

Towns Looted by Rebellious Boers

FRIDTJOF, South Africa, Nov. 22.—The Boer rebels in South Africa are looting towns that they capture, only to abandon them to the forces of the British. Details of the occupation and pillaging of Winburg in Orange Free State were received here today in a telegram from Bloemfontein.

A detachment of rebels under General De Wet, entered Winburg on November 5. General De Wet first threatened to burn a store owned by the mayor, but finally contented himself with seizing all the tobacco and riding breeches in the building.

Afterward De Wet sent for the mayor and violently upbraided him, declaring that the people of Winburg had shot his son in the light at Bloemfontein. The rebel leader's feelings are so overcome that he has assailed the mayor. After this the soldiers began looting, seizing seven wagon loads full of supplies.

FRESH RUSH FRESH PROOPS TO RESUME OFFENSIVE ON YSER

Worn-Out Soldiers Are Sent to the Rear on Furloughs; Many of Them Go to Hospitals.

By FRANKLIN P. MERRICK.

PARIS, Nov. 22.—Fresh announcements in Flanders around Arras and Bethune and at various points along the Belgian border in the region of Ypres. The arrival of reinforcements and the indications that the French, British and Belgians will resume the offensive have been causing the press to report that the offensive is about to begin. The official conclusion is that the offensive is about to begin. The official conclusion is that the offensive is about to begin.

More than one hundred guns, some of them removed from forts upon the Meuse and the Spanish frontier, have been rushed into Belgium. It is confidently stated that the positions held by the French and British around Dinant, Ypres and Warrington are impregnable.

We have on hand about 100,000 men, said a wounded British officer from the front. "The Germans are foolish to try to batter their way through our lines at that point."

The arrival of fresh troops on the Yser front is enabling French and British to resist the German offensive. The arrival of fresh troops on the Yser front is enabling French and British to resist the German offensive.

There is nothing more gratifying than the association with strong vigorous men and women who enjoy perfect health. Health is in great part due to correct living. Think back a generation and recall the healthy, strong and happy old people of your youth; they lived right. The business and social pace was not so rapid then—they took time to eat properly—they had better stomachs. There is no more important bodily organ than the stomach. Give the stomach perfect action and

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey Is A Valuable Remedy For Many Ills

The foundation of perfect health is laid. Neglected stomach disorders lead to nervous and anæmic conditions that often develop into heart complaints and permit of bad colds and even serious bronchial and lung troubles. Great numbers of people who have suffered in one way or another from the effects of disordered stomachs have learned that through the judicious use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey a better health is obtained—a renewed and happier interest in life is possible.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

It is a food of nature in liquid form. Made from the choicest grains of the field, thoroughly malted. It's mild and stimulating effect on the mucous surface and little glands of digestion starts the flow of saliva for the reduction of starches and the secretion of the gastric juice for the digestion of other food—in other words, Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey aids and strengthens the organs of the stomach to properly do the work intended by nature. Young and old alike have found it invaluable in times of illness and old age.

Numerous unprejudiced physicians who have tested

Stomach Troubles Relieved

"I want to express my thanks for the good Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has done me. My attending physician told me I could not live three months and said I had consumption of the stomach. I read your advertisement in the newspaper, bought a bottle, took it, and it has done me so much good I cannot praise Duffy's enough."—Mr. Chas. A. Warner, Cambridgeport, Vt.

Made Her Strong and Well

"Two years ago after a severe illness of stomach trouble, I was left in such a weakened condition that my doctors thought I would not live through the winter. Before taking Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey none of the medicines the doctor gave me seemed to help me, and I suffered untold agony. As a last resort, the doctor who was a strong temperance advocate, said he would try getting me to take Duffy's; and I cannot express how thankful I am that he did for it. It is the thing that saved my life."—Mrs. W. F. Wallace, 3626 N. Cambridge St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Called Duffy's "Elixir of Life"

"I am seventy-two years old and in perfect health. When I was forty-seven the doctors thought I would die of consumption. I fooled them all—I started to take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and soon grew strong and every day and can climb six flights of stairs without fatigue. In my opinion there is nothing in the world as good to put vim, vigor and vitality into any run-down person as Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. I call it the "Elixir of Life."—Mr. H. Steinhilber, 196 East 76th St., New York City.

Cannot Praise Duffy's Enough

"I had a very bad attack of dysentery that lasted two months. My doctor gave me medicine and I grew weaker and weaker. I saw an ad of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and I was glad to get weak because at once bought a bottle and before it was half used I was getting stronger. I finished the bottle and was myself again. I cannot praise Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey enough for it was my life savior."—Mrs. H. Cooper, 2340 Broadway Ave., Ridgewood, Brooklyn, N.Y.

the tonic properties of this famous product prescribe it unhesitatingly when a tonic stimulant is indicated—particularly for weakened and run down conditions such as follow the ravages of typhoid, pneumonia and all low forms of diseases.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is Genuine. Doubt cannot exist where such a product has been of public benefit for more than half a century. Every letter written about it by grateful users is true and freely given, and no letter is used without a Notary's Seal or statement.

RADCLIFFE STIR OVER THIEF STORY

Two Girls Break Into Print with Letter Denouncing Student

The chief chatter at Radcliffe College yesterday was over the way two of the college girls "bought" the front print with a signed denunciation of the operations of a "Student Raffle" who is alleged to be helping herself to college funds.

Radcliffe is ultra-conservative and publicity is a serious proposition. But Anna C. Hoyt, sophomore, and the other girls who signed the denunciant letter to the Radcliffe News, are not at all ultra-conservative. They hold capital "Student Dishonesty" to be a crime, and the "Student Raffle" is the chiefest example. It isn't nunnice matters, but reads as follows:

It is not fair to suppose that the girls of Radcliffe are not intelligent enough to enter Radcliffe College she should know the difference between right and wrong and "thine"? It seems as if Radcliffe were confronted with a very serious problem. The "Student Raffle" is the dishonesty of some of her own students.

Such dishonesty is certainly a disgrace, and the attitude of the college is disgraceful. It is a disgrace that does not help to solve the problem.

feeling friend can sympathize with the freshman who, complaining that her fountain pen had been stolen from her locker, do you expect? "The more fool you leave it there, anyhow."

Must we all be hardened to accept these cases of dishonesty as part of college life? If the whole college were justly indignant over every loss no matter how small, might not this changed attitude substantially help to solve this problem?

ROXBURY TO HAVE XMAS CARNIVAL

Entire District to Unite in Grand
White Way; Outdoor Concert and Vaudeville.

Roxbury is getting ready for its first big Christmas carnival, and the plan is to make the whole district into one grand Great White Way. The bulk of the carnival is the Roxbury Fair, which will be a combination of an enterprising body of business men of the section. Already elaborate preparations have been made for a notable Yuletide celebration. The fair will be held on the tented grounds making the rest of Boston sit up and take notice. At the junction of Warren and Washington streets there will be a bandstand and outdoor dancing. The fair will have a number of programs will entertain thousands. The carnival is to start December 1st and will continue every night. On Saturday afternoon Santa Claus will receive the youngsters. The fair will be held on the streets. Along Washington, Warren and Washington streets. The fair will be placed standards twenty feet high with banners of many colors. Streets

FRIEND SOAP CO.
Dept. 419,
Concord Junction, Mass.

JESSE POMEROY SOON TO TOUCH ELBOWS WITH HIS FELLOW-MEN

It was quite the proper thing at the Hotel Lenox last night to walk friend up to the hotel bulletin and say: "Read that!" "That" was a notice, as follows:

There has been no decision that this hotel will be closed on Monday next. All parties in interest are working harmoniously to effect a transfer of business without interruption and without confusion to the guests—WILLIAM M. KOBLE.

So the Lenox will NOT close to-morrow, despite all rumors to the contrary. It certainly was good

It started this way. The hotel's physical property, the land and building, have been owned by one corporation, while another ran the hotel business, or "operated" it, as it were.

The Lenox Hotel Company owned the physical property, with the Frederick Ayer estate holding a first mortgage.

The Associated Trust Hotels, incorporated, was the operating corporation. A while back the operating corporation became involved, so that William M. Noble, a State street lawyer, was appointed trustee in bankruptcy. He continued, as trustee, to keep the hotel running.

Meanwhile effort was made to auction the physical property. The formalities of auction, red flag and all, were there from week to week, but no bidders.

Finally the Frederick Ayer estate, holders of the first mortgage, bid in the property Friday. Then came a report that the new owners of the Hotel building had sent Manager Brine notice to "close up." This got around among the guests. But Mr. Brine, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Associated Trust Hotels, Incorporated, notified Manager Brine to keep open.

Between one thing and another the manager was as busy as a one-armed man hanging wall paper. This state of affairs was impossible. Trustee Noble conferred with representatives of the Frederick Ayer estate yesterday.

Result—the new notice that the hotel will keep on doing business at the old stand.

Bill Allows Voters to Raise Salaries

Brookline voters will have the power to fix the salaries of the town officials if the petition filed yesterday by Assessor David J. Daley is approved favorably at the town meeting on December 16. The petition has the signatures of 25 voters. A year ago the citizens voted an increase in salary to the firemen and police. This increase was not approved by the Selectmen, who claimed that they had the sole power to grant such increases.

Wife Acquitted of Slaving Charge

Playing Change

Virginia Barbato and Gaetano Devalio, who have been on trial in Salem for two weeks on a charge of murdering the woman's husband in the Beverly woods on July 4, were yesterday found not guilty by a jury which had been deliberating for twelve hours.

Devalio and the woman fled after the death of Barbato, the woman's husband, and were arrested in Princeton, N. J.

Dear Billy, letter but did not answer it because I was so busy - One day I was busy all day sitting in the attic without any thing to eat for putting glue in Ma's button box. Another day I was busy getting spanked in the morning and going to bed without my dinner in the afternoon. I studied all day one day. I studied how to be good and do it without exciting any one's curiosity. When I am good now they get suspicious of me and think I am cooking up some awful trouble but I am not. Trouble comes along so easy that a boy is silly to waste time thinking up any just dance out of the corner of your eye. You will see it soon.

A BELATED ROMANCE OF THE TITANIC

Mrs. Robert W. Daniel, Whose First Honeymoon Ended When Lucien P. Smith Went Down with the Titanic. The Same Lifeboat Which Carried Her to the Carpathia Picked Up Mr. Daniel, Her Future Second Husband

THE one rift of light penetrating the pall of horror resting upon the Titanic disaster of three years ago has been the series of love romances which circumstances of their rescue brought about in the case of several survivors.

The belated romance of Robert W. Daniel and the young widow of Lucien P. Smith, just now revealed, belongs to this category. Both were passengers on the Titanic, and both narrowly missed death. They were picked up and brought to New York by the rescue ship Carpathia.

A few days ago Mr. Daniel announced that he and Mrs. Boise Hughes Smith were secretly married last August 13. Explaining the delay of this announcement, Mr. Daniel, who is president of the Robert W. Daniel banking house of Philadelphia, said:

"We were married in New York. On the following day I was compelled to sail for London on urgent business. Owing to the war I decided that it would be difficult to care for Mrs. Daniel abroad, so I left her here. I intended to return in three weeks, but was held up for more than two months. My hurried departure prevented me from announcing our marriage. Only our close friends knew of it."

It was an extraordinary coincidence that the same disaster which made Mrs. Lucien P. Smith acquainted with her future second husband was the tragic finale of her first honeymoon. She was Mary Elsie Hughes, of Washington. Mr. Smith was of a wealthy Unetown (Pa.) family. They were married in February, 1912, and immediately went on a honeymoon journey to the valley of the Nile. Returning to London in April, they embarked on the Titanic for home.

When the ship was sinking Mr. Smith kissed his bride in farewell and placed her in the same lifeboat in which John Jacob Astor placed his young wife, Madeline Force Astor. Both wives were comforted by the thought that their husbands would find places in other boats. But they were never to see them again.

Mr. Daniel, though a passenger on the Titanic, had not met the Smiths. He had only himself to look after, but was one of that gallant band of men who exerted themselves up to the last moment in helping women and children into the lifeboats. It was while he was giving such assistance to one of the last of the rescued women that he was literally kicked into the sea in a scramble of panic-stricken passengers to reach the lifeboat.

Mrs. Smith was the only Southern woman on board the rescue ship. That fact made the sympathy and attentions of Mr. Daniel seem all the more appreciated.

When the Carpathia landed the Titanic survivors at New York Mr. Daniel saw Mrs. Smith, felt in the hands of friend who took her home to her people in Washington. When there no longer was any hope that Mr. Smith had survived the Titanic's fate he was among the first of those friends to send messages of condolence.

The period of the young widow's mourning was prolonged by the birth of a handsome baby boy, which was christened after its father—Lucien P. Smith. The baby was born with considerable "expectations," and during the year following its mother busied herself in connection with the settling of her late husband's estate.

This proved a bothersome and disappointing task. Mr. Smith's relatives claimed that, far from being a rich man, Mr. Smith had left practically no estate. Last May Mrs. Smith began proceedings in the courts of Unetown, Pa., to secure for her little son whatever might be discovered.

In the meantime, in January, 1914, Mr. Daniel had caused to blossom into a love romance the congenial acquaintance

That kick probably not only saved his life, but instigated the romance now happily culminated.

He was chilled into unconsciousness when a lifeboat picked him up.

Mr. Daniel did not know until the next day that Mrs. Smith was in that same lifeboat. When he had recovered from his chill and they met on the Carpathia she told him.

The natural sympathy of fellow survivors drew them together. Mr. Daniel cheered her with arguments that as the boat which had brought them to the Carpathia was one of the first to leave the Titanic there were many chances that Mr. Smith had found a place in one of the later ones. So their acquaintance ripened, nourished on the congenial food of sympathy and appreciated at last.

Both were disappointed, and when Mr. Daniel saw Mrs. Smith, felt in the hands of friend who took her home to her people in Washington. When there no longer was any hope that Mr. Smith had survived the Titanic's fate he was among the first of those friends to send messages of condolence.

begin aboard the rescue ship Carpathia a year and a half before. He went to Washington and secured a special permission from her relatives to call upon his long-polluted survivor of the Titanic wreck.

Mrs. Smith was then resuming her former place in Washington society. The romance developed rapidly, though she was reports that Mrs. Smith's father, Congressman James W. Hughes, of Huntington, W. Va., did not look upon it with favor—why, still remains a mystery.

Some light on the occasion for the secret marriage which occurred last August may be contained in the report that when Mr. Daniel went to Huntington a few days last Spring to see Mrs. Smith's father their interview was the reverse of pleasant.

Quite in keeping with all the tales of this romance—where there is parental opposition Mrs. Smith's found occasion to visit New York on the eve of Mr. Daniel's departure from that port for London.

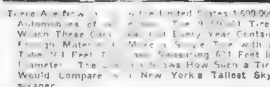

They were married at the Little Church Around the Corner. Next day Mr. Daniel's embarked for Europe, and the new Mrs. Daniels returned to Huntington, where she resumed her participation in social gayeties as though nothing unusual had happened.

So carefully did she guard her secret that the first her own people knew about this August marriage was when she told them at the time of her departure for New York to meet Mr. Daniel on his return from Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel have taken a country place near Philadelphia, where they are spending the delayed honeymoon which so happily culminates their belated romance.

What December Has in Store for Us as Foretold by the Stars

THERE is a martial trend to the December full moon, which rules the first half of the month, with the luminaries unfavorably related by aspect to that planet. This conjunction is likewise in affliction with the place of Uranus in the Government horoscope.

Along our shores. This arctic blaze bears unfavorably upon the scientific and religious worlds. Deaths in financial circles are also noted, including that of a prominent member of wealth.

How Win-At-Any-Cost Games Are Making Invalids of Boys and Girls

MANY medical authorities have long advised that the competitive activities of our American children are excessive often harbor untold dangers because they encourage overdoing the part of the participants. No one will deny that systematic and strenuous exercise may exert a most beneficial effect on the human organism, but the win-at-any-cost exertion, taxing vital organs to the very limit of their endurance, exceeding the factor of safety in physiologic functions, and sometimes carried to the breaking strain, is believed to represent a sort of unjustifiable self-sacrifice that may properly be made for one's country, but is never called for to uphold the glory of one's college.

It is urged that the sooner we realize that there are better tests of manliness than the ability to endure a four-mile race in the college boat or to complete the football season in spite of assured injuries the more wholesome will American college life become.

"Unfortunately," says a writer in the Journal of the American Medical Association, "there is a widely manifested tendency for the pupil of the high school to ape the performance of his older brother in the college." This is shown in the introduction of Greek letter societies and social functions into the secondary schools, tending to counterbalance some of their wholesome features of moral intercourse with the snobbery of exclusiveness and the deteriorating influence of late hours and trivial distractions. Even more harmful, however, is the growing custom of allowing the same sort of intense competitive sports in the high school that are the cause of complaint in respect to their dangers in the college student.

"It is gratifying to note a spirit of protest awakened in various parts of the United States against all the forces, social and athletic, which tend to deteriorate the American boys—and frequently girls as well—at the adolescent age of the high school period.

"One health officer has recently made a public announcement that proper exercise in a well-equipped gymnasium, under the guidance of a trained instructor, is good for any one, but that competitive athletics, requiring most strenuous exercise, long and tedious training and self-denial, is positively bad for any one before full development, and that such overexertion tends to impair the keenness of the mind and interfere with school work proper, as well as to injure the body.

D—An Ultra Modern "Lucile" Model

B—Inspired by the "Donkey Girl" of Greece, "Lucile" Model

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York City.

By Lady Duff-Gordon

NOW that Paris cannot for the present be looked to for at least next season's new models, I have many who come to me and say, "Lady Duff-Gordon, what are to be the new lines for the Spring?"

I tell them I don't know. I never do know any more than any one else until I actually sit to work. New lines are developed, possibly suggested, by the fall or hang of a new material, or perchance by the unusual attitude accidentally struck by the girl I am draping. It appeals to me—I use it, exaggerate or modify it, and lo! a new style is born.

To my mind, it is the smaller houses that run to death each season a new particular line, such as a tunic, which they immediately dub "a tunic season," or a long coat, they call a "haque (hateful word) season."

These were no light, that thousands invariably have long and short coats, draped and tunic skirts, and for the last season of two no dressmaker has tied herself to any particular period or style, and never before has woman had such an opportunity of developing her own peculiar personality and expressing them by means of her attire.

With the accompanying photographs of the newest evening gowns let me point out for you the influence of no less than five distinct periods.

Photograph A is obviously drawn from the Greek, with its light chiton draperies caught below the bust and again below the waist by jewelled cameo clasps.

B must remind you immediately of the Greek "Donkey Girl," with its little lace cap, chiton apron caught up to one side and its flower embroidered taffeta skirt.

C might well have been made a hundred years ago, with its tiny high-waisted bodice and baby sleeves. The skirt is of tulle decorated with embroideries and frills of green and silver over a white and silver under dress.

If possible, it is the only one that is in its own merit as an entirely modern creation. It is a brocade of blue and silver, with gray lace on the bodice and the opening at the side of the skirt. Brilliant touches of green and a contrasting blue appear at the waist.

E is from the East, being a tea gown in Oriental lamé silk, with a matrix turquoise embroidered belt of gold and necklace to match.

How War Has Turned Pigeons Into Photographers.

THROUGH wireless telegraphy and aeroplanes may have lessened the importance of pigeons as dispatch bearers in times of war, they have by no means ousted them. Only a few days since two pigeon dealers, one of them a German, were arrested in London for having in their possession sixty carrier and other pigeons in contravention of the Aliens Restriction Act; and about the same time a German spy was arrested in Belgium with pigeons in his possession under circumstances which left no room for doubt that they were to be used to further his nefarious ends.

Now that armies actually can make use of trained pigeons as photographers, these birds are in the way of becoming important factors in war. A miniature camera is now manufactured for this purpose. Suspended by straps beneath the bird's breast, its lens is directed downward while the flight continues. Its action is, of course, automatic, governed by a turning mechanism which causes a roll of film to be exposed at regular intervals.

The pigeon photographer flying above the enemy's lines in daytime brings home on a tiny roll of film a picture record of all that was beneath its flight—details of the enemy's position and strength in men and guns.

The possibilities of pigeon photography in war were recognized in Germany some time ago. Experiments were made under army supervision. They were successful, views of parks, rivers and bridges and city streets of quite remarkable distinctness being developed from the exposed portions of film-rolls brought back by the pigeon camera-carriers.

That these aerial messengers are still capable of rendering valuable service, chiefly between forts, is shown by the fact that in Germany there are about 200,000 of these "homing pigeons," belonging to various societies, and of this number about 8,000 are reserved exclusively for Government use.

During the Franco-German War of 1870-71 these pigeons played a very important part. At first they carried dispatches reduced by photography to microscopic proportions on tiny sheets of paper. Later, all matter, whether public dispatches or letters, were printed in ordinary type transferred and reduced by microphotography to thin films of collodion measuring about two inches by one inch. These were no light, that thousands of dispatches, weighing less than one gramme, could be carried by one pigeon.

The films were rolled up and placed in a quill, which was then fastened lengthwise to one of the tail feathers. Arriving in Paris, the film was flattened out, and the printed matter was thrown on a screen by a lantern and copied. Later, sensitive paper replaced the screen, so that the labor of copying was saved. The cost of sending messages was high, as may be judged from the fact that the postal fees on a single dispatch would often amount to more than $500,000. Each dispatch was repeated, sometimes twenty or thirty times, till acknowledged by balloon post, which brought back the birds for another journey. The Germans spared no effort to frustrate these sources of information. Krupp made special guns to bring down the balloons, and the pigeons were harassed by trained falcons.

To a term "carrier pigeon" for this bird is now a misnomer; for the "carrier" pigeon is a bird of a different type, distinguished by the enormous development of the "wattles" round the eyes and back. The true "carrier" pigeon is now more correctly known as the homing pigeon, heron, or Antwerp carrier. Its latter name indicates the origin of the breed; for the Belgians are without rivals for their skill in training it. The homer is, even in his native land, represented by several races all of which, however, possess the "homing" instinct. These races are bred first and foremost for their powers of flight; color and marking are of no account.

The speed of some of these birds averaged 1,200 yards a minute, but today this has been increased to 1,856 yards a minute. The speed, of course, depends much on the state of the weather. In a race between Montargis and Brussels, in 1876, in bright clear, weather all the prize-winners made the journey of 270 miles in three hours and a quarter. Over the same course in 1877, in thick, stormy weather, thirty hours elapsed before the first bird arrived.

That the homing pigeon possesses an extraordinarily acute sense of direction there can be no question. A case is on record of a bird bought in Brussels and brought over to England, where it remained in close confinement for several months. Then, one day, it was liberated for exercise. It at once made off, and in a few hours was back in its loft in Brussels, having travelled over 400 miles of country which had never seen before. As a rule, however, these birds are carefully trained, the initial stages beginning at the age of about four months. By the end of the first year a flight of one hundred miles can be successfully performed. But longer flights are performed only by fully matured birds of at least three years old. It is a mistake, however, to suppose, as some do, that they will fly at night or in a fog. They must always have a clear view.

The World of Books

The

BODY is made up of the food that you have eaten, the air that you have breathed, the exercise that you have taken.

Your mind is made up of the books that you have read, the wise talk you have heard, the thinking that you have done.

The picture on this page illustrates an important truth—BOOKS ARE THE GREAT TRANSPORTATION AGENCIES OF THE HUMAN RACE.

One book shows you clearly the wonders of the North, another the mystery of the South, and another takes you to look into the great gulf of some distant nebula.

The fastest flying machine one day will take us around the earth in twenty-four hours.

A good book takes us from here to the sun, more than ninety millions of miles, in half a minute.

What books should a man read?—how should he read them? These are questions most important to every intelligent being in this age—THE FIRST OF UNIVERSAL READING THAT THE CIVILIZED WORLD HAS KNOWN.

Professor Flint, able and earnest teacher of young men in the University of Kansas, sends this message and question:

My class in editorial writing in the University of Kansas has asked me to write you the names of a dozen or so of the books which you find most useful for reference in your editorial work. In other words, what books constitute your "ideal library" for the editor of a daily newspaper?

The class is working on such a list of aids to the editor and will be greatly interested in having your recommendations. They have taken great interest in studying your editorial page and will feel the pleasure of something approaching a personal acquaintance if you will be kind enough to respond to this inquiry. I am inclosing a stamped envelope for reply.

Thanking you in the name of the class for this favor, I am,

Yours very truly,
LEWIS M. FLINT.

Many thousands of times men more or less able have prepared "lists of books." Usually the list is a collection of names and titles. And usually it means nothing.

The editor of a newspaper, like all others, works, not with the books on the shelf beside him, but with the books INSIDE OF HIS HEAD. It is with the editor as with the athlete. The latter works with the barbell he ate yesterday, not with the meat he has in the refrigerator.

Twelve books are a great many books—if you have chosen twelve of the best, and if you have really DIGESTED THEM.

Abraham Lincoln probably read fewer than twelve first-class books, yet he was thoroughly equipped to be the President of the United States, to keep those United States together, and to settle one of the most difficult questions ever submitted to the judgment and conscience of a free man. The question to ask, of course, is not "What books shall I have at my elbow?" but "What books shall I store away JUST BACK OF MY FOREHEAD?"

The reference library is only of real use when it is an aid to memory.

Young men studying journalism—the profession that should be to a nation what language is to the individual—should ask "What books should be a part of ME, read, digested, absorbed, OWNED by me, before I undertake to talk to others, offer them my ideas, or even attempt to describe simply and accurately what has happened?"

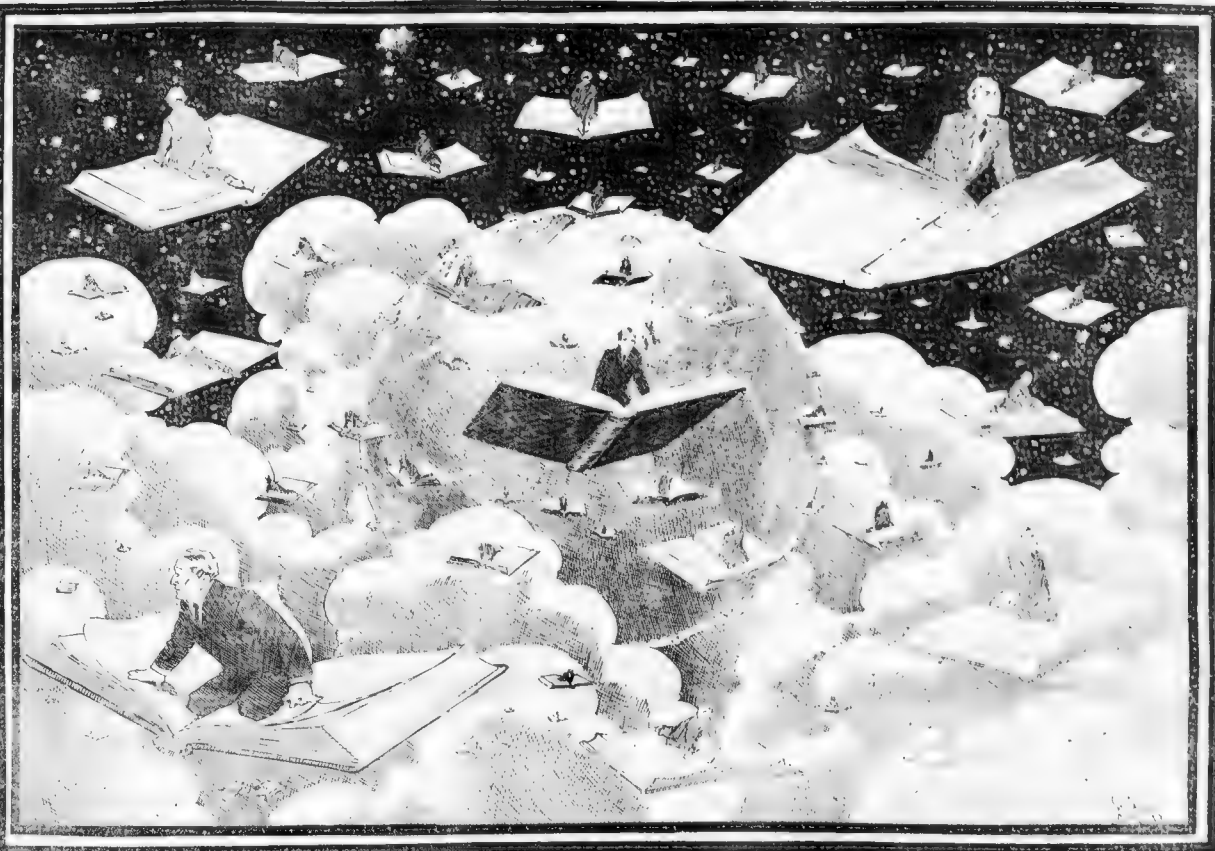

A book does one or both of two things: It supplies you with facts, definite information. IT FEEDS YOUR IMAGINATION, builds up your power of original thought.

The Bible is the greatest book to which we have access because it covers, expresses and condenses the feeling, emotion, hope, despair and belief of human beings covering a very long period of time.

The Bible is old, full of the sorrows, dreams, hopes, hatreds and aspirations of the human race. We got it from the Jews. The Jews, so say the scientists, got it from the Babylonians. The Babylonians got their ideas, their stories, their legends and other details of life from the people that lived and worried thousands of years before them.

The Bible is the greatest book for the editor, or the farmer, or the grocer, for it has in it more than any other book the story of human thought, from the day when Job humbled himself in the dust talking about behemoth and leviathan and ascribes to the almost modern day when Paul, the aristocratic Jewish nobleman of Tarsus, preached salvation based on unselfishness.

As editor should have the Bible in his head and the Bible concordance at his elbow, that he may find at once the exact wording that he wants. Next to the Bible comes Shakespeare. Ambition is the greatest force in the human intellect. Shakespeare alone among human beings expressed ambition adequately. An editor should have a great deal of Shakespeare in his head, and all of

The Book Is More Wonderful Than the Magic Carpet That Took the Traveller All Over the Earth. A Good Book Takes the Traveller Away from the Earth, Beyond the Limits of Sight, to the Farthest Boundary of Imagination and Scientific Investigation. The Steam Engine, the Flying Machine, the Swift Boat and the Wireless Telegraph, Wonderful as They Are, Do Less Than a Good Book IN THE CONQUEST OF SPACE.

Knowledge is simple and easy to get for the man who has an APPETITE for it.

After a knowledge of astronomy or man's place in the universe, the knowledge of the geological foundation upon which we stand and build and raise our crops, we should know the history of the development of life or EVOLUTION. Astronomy, geology, natural history, or a study of life on the planet, come first in the foundation of knowledge—then the history of human thought, which is the only important history.

The right kind of a history for those in a hurry that cannot buy and read many books is still to be written. It will not be a very big book. It will outline our limited knowledge of man before he gathered in communities and used his brain instead of his hands.

It will be a history of THOUGHT and of knowledge that results from thought. When history is read intelligently the big thing will be the invention of the steam engine, not the Battle of Waterloo.

The history of men's thoughts is real history, not the history of cutting throats or dates of battle. The history of man on this planet could be told sufficiently in five thousand words.

Those five thousand words properly understood would give a knowledge of what the human race really is and has been better than that which many young men absorb in their four years of college life.

A history of thought, of philosophy, so called, of science, art, government, should be stored away in the mind of the man who pretends to talk to others.

If you know where you are in this universe or where you are supposed to be, and something about the machine in which your solar system is a small grain of star dust, if you know something about the earth on which you stand, something about life in its various forms, something about human thought shown in government, speculation, scientific discovery, art and music, YOU HAVE AN EDUCATION.

The reading that may be done and ought to be done is unlimited.

The making of a library for the editor is something like the preparing of a dinner for a gentleman found starved to death in the snow. If he is starved there is no use giving him a dinner.

If the editor hasn't the books in his head by the time he begins writing there is not much use giving him a library.

To oblige the young gentlemen at the University of Kansas who intend to be editors, however, a few books may be suggested for editorial reading.

There are fortunately not a dozen, or a hundred, or a thousand, but very many more "best books." No book is a best book to the Hottentot who sees nothing in it. A very simple book may be a best book to the mind that can use it.

There is no value in the book itself, value only in the thought that it creates in the brain reading the book.

Homer, Dante, Shakespeare—these are the three greatest writers that have lived. A man should know and be familiar with all three of them.

Plato's Republic is the cornerstone of nearly all abstract philosophizing during the last two thousand years. It is the only book that you should read the whole thing at once, and then read it again.

Read the Bible, the Koran, the Talmud, the Vedas, the Bhagavad Gita, the Upanishads, the Tao Te Ching, the Analects, the Zuo Chuan, the Shu Ching, the Chun Ching, the I Ching, the Mencius, the Chuang Tzu, the Tao Te Ching, the Analects, the Zuo Chuan, the Shu Ching, the Chun Ching, the I Ching, the Mencius, the Chuang Tzu.

Dinkelspiel Sees "Experience," and Tells About It

By GEORGE V. HOBART.

I was asked by a friend of mine what was in the authorship business would I go and witness a play last Wednesday and afterwards would I speak about it in red paper mit paprika in der pen und chills and fever in every sentence, just like a regular critical.

I laughed my face around sideways at der thought of such a suggestion, because a man can become a regular fair class critical only after long and burning years of indignation. Und I never hat to look people in my life, already.

I was asked, without I carry a bottle of vitrol to the play, for I was told that a dose of cranberry of cranberry would in der pocket be, and I not der question, went by my theatre to see der play of "Experience" under der name of "Experience."

"Experience" is a play by the name of "Experience" and it is a play about a man who has a lot of experience in the world.

Vell, anyway, mit Spiegel set to Hope: "Der morning has much prettiness, Hope, but in my heart it is dark because I am going away."

"You see der idea," I whispered to Spiegel. "You'll be going away and even I can't see mit Hope by her side. I am going to see der play about der separation."

"It means to yobble," I whispered. "To want to go dis way and want to go dot way and can't make up your mind vich way to go."

"I know it now," whispered Spiegel. "It is der same idea as ven you go out Sunday morning to took a walk mit your wife ven you would radder go out alone and get a glass of beer. But I thought der high-brow name for such a predicament was called 'inflammation.'"

You know, to be a friend of Spiegel's and keep entitled by der name of "Der Primrose Pat" and it is here dot Yout' begins to go der pace dot kills.

In der next scenery for a moment he tries to pull himself together, because here in "Der Street of Delusion" he waits, shabby but proud, to meet his old-time friends on der way to "Der Primrose Pat."

Here it is dot Yout' appears, rough and ready, but der Yout' don't find him attractive enough to listen to right away and Vork says it, "Ven you surely want me, vell, you come out and look for me," and goes on his way.

Der boy's fashionable friends arrive and dey van by van, turn him down, and himely ven Yout' goes out to look for Vork he can't find him.

To get away from Poverty der boy follows Delusion to "Der House of Lost Soulds," and dare in dot terrible place he meets Criss.

"You see it," I set to Spiegel: "Vot der farst wrong step makes out of it? I vill bat my boy Looby here at der Boof Theatre tomorrow night to see dis play, because here is something to make him sit up and notice under people besides der bartenders at der club."

MONTAGUE'S COLUMN

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

TO THE FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
Which has undertaken to dictate the styles to be worn by young women students.

MOST grave and reverend gentlemen,
We quite applaud your indignation;
We've done some fussing now and then
About this fashion situation.
We have expressed polite regret
As waists grew thin and skirts grew shorter,
And that young women seem just set
On wearing clothes they hadn't eter.

IN lightness verse and labored quip
And sundry printed prose reflections,
We've said these scanty styles mean gripe
And other bronchial affections.
To save young women from the styles
Has been our strenuous endeavor,
But they, with gay contemptuous smiles,
Began to wear less clothes than ever.

TO prove our point beyond a doubt
We've lashed ourselves into a frenzy,
We've written reams and reams about
The dread effects of influenza.
And though the girls agreed with us
They said, "Oh, why get in a passion
And kick up such an awful fuss?
You know we've got to be in fashion."

AND so, most grave and reverend sirs,
Do not affect the tyrant's bearing.
Because the fair coed incurs
Your wrath by what she isn't wearing.
Don't let your words of wisdom be
For callow damsels to get gay with,
If you'd preserve your dignity
Start something you can get away with.

Some Lauderisms

Harry Lauder, the famous Scotch comedian, has a reputation for st. ingness, which means that he is probably possessed of the Scotch trait of thrift. He knows the value of money, and is equally well acquainted with the fact that many things in life are uncertain. But he is always ready to help when some one is in need. Only recently, when he appeared as an actor at a benefit performance of "A Scrape of the Pen" in London, he was the first to start a collection to raise the proceeds of the benefit to £2,000. When a man up to a story he tells on himself.

After he had become successful and had gathered to himself sufficient "gillies," he decided to buy an estate in Scotland and become a lord, which is the height of most true Scotch ambition. He bought an old estate of Dunoon and assumed the dignity of a lord. He summoned some of the old tenants and questioned him as to what the lords of Dunoon had been accustomed to do for their tenants.

"Ye'll ken, Sandy, mon," said Harry, "that I weel to follow a' the old customs of the lords of Dunoon. Will ye speer to me o' these customs?"

"That I will and gladly," said the old fellow. "First o' a' it has been the custom of the lords of Dunoon to give a grand supper to a' the lords and ladies of the estate. When would it please you to hand the same?"

"As ye say in America," explained Lauder, "I was the 'gout.' I gave the grand supper, but never again did I ask about old customs."

"The strangest audience I ever played to was in this country, when I was asked to entertain about 1,000 lunatics at the asylum on Ward's Island, near New York. They were very responsive, and I got them to sing the chorus of 'I Love a Lassie' with me. It was the finest choir I have ever heard in the United States. Just before I was leaving one put out two new-made and said: 'For my sake, don't make faces or a' that ye do to me, or I'll think ye're a bit off or they'll keep you here!'

Lauder has a sense of humor that he retains off the stage as well as on. One day when he was walking outside his home at Tooting, London, he was accosted by a beggar, who pleaded great penury. "All," said Lauder, in a most pathetic voice, pointing toward his own house, "you needn't try, there, for I've just been refused!"

1—A store at the corner of the square is having a lovely quilted kimono embroidered with red and green dragons. A most suitable gift for a lunatic neighbor about 15 pounds.

2—A beautiful tea set was observed in a haberdashery store on Washington street. It is solidly constructed of reinforced concrete and would be an ideal Christmas gift for an exuberant ironworker.

3—Those of a literary turn will be intoxicated with joy over a complete library set of Dickens, bound in half full calf. A dainty gift for any one owning an outhouse.

4—Of course your friend needs a compact little machine gun for shooting rural constables?

5—Nothing could be nicer for a baby than a cannon loaded with a pound of real gunpowder, guaranteed to blow up any house

THE SMILE'S THANKSGIVING STORY

OUTSIDE the snow was falling. The rest had fallen as far as it could and was now resting on the ground.

Inside the stout old farmhouse no snow was falling. The reason for this was the roof. Had the roof been removed, snow would undoubtedly have fallen. It is the stout old farmhouse.

Outside the air was chill, but inside the s. n. f. the air was warm, probably because of the huge fire which blazed in the stove.

Any one peeping through the window noticed the snow. It had been dangerous to see one whose face was not proof against the cold—would have known without a calendar that it was Thanksgiving.

The table was crowded with an old-fashioned Thanksgiving dinner. A large roast pumpkin, a box of stuffed cranberries, potato sauce, elder gravy. At the foot of the table sat the old farmer. Ever and anon, also once in a while, he glanced at the door, as if expecting some one. There was a look of sadness in the eyes of the farmer's wife, as she

"Because," said I, doggedly, "I have discovered that New York is the greatest Summer"—

"Don't say that again," interrupted North, unless you've actually got a job as general passenger agent of the subway. You can't really believe it."

I went to some trouble to try to prove my eery to my friend. The Weather Bureau and the season had conspired to make the argument worthy of an able advocate.

After dining we went to a roof garden where the place that was being much praised was a little more than a good bill, an artistically decorated place, cold drinks, prompt service and a very well dressed audience. North was bored. "If this isn't comfortable enough for you," he said, "the hottest August night for five years," he said a little sarcastically, "you might think about a kids down in Delaney and Heister street."

When a strong man without imagination is knocking round the fringe of the earth, the policemen are an unknown quantity and are a step ten parallels away he's not a good bet for a life insurance company. But Desmond had luck.

He had a mixed crew—Javanese, Japs, Orang and Klinges; but the best man on the job was a half-caste Chinaman from Dutch Borneo named Chola. He did the work of two

"One morning Desmond sprang upon him," on the boat, and when we dried out at Lul Rock he was worth three of the others.

It was Chola who found the Bush. When and where he found it, I don't know; but one morning Desmond sprang upon him, bounced him onto the boards, and rolled him over and over. The others just looked on wondering, and I grabbed a pump-stave to keep any one Desmond looked up, brushed the hair out of his eyes, and laughed then as he remembered the little rumpus.

"Oh," he said, "the little yellow devil! Let him go on with his work, of course."

Then he started to tell me about the girl to whom he had promised the pearl. He said she had auburn hair; but I had tested Desmond's eye for color when the sun would be slipping down toward Timor of an evening, so I formed

"'Beha isn't dead,'" said Desmond; "he's shamming: Some trick is in the wind, and we've got to keep our lamps trimmed, or we'll go over the side without any canvas wrapping or prayer service."

"How d'ye know he's alive?" I asked.

"Something'll happen today," he growled.
"And you forget the name I gave you?"
"Miss Blaine A. . .," I murmured.
"And the address."
"711 King Street, West Thira," said I.

But I was a free human being and was not afraid, and he left me alone. I was sitting down on the floor, and he came to a window and was good for her as long as he could get it.

of the divers said that he had seen him aboard after the dead Cho's had taken charge, so it looked as if he were in league with the half-caste.
